Addiction is any bad habit that harms the well-being of an individual. Addiction is an emerging common and harmful problem developed among youth. The mysterious neural disorder makes such little sense to the onlooker and even to the addict. Addicts are prone to making poor and unhealthy choices due to the low brain process of information. Addiction is a long process that requires the support of the addict's friends and family at various addiction levels like mentally, physically, psychologically, and emotionally. The addict hardly recognises his or her behaviour or actions as abnormal or unusual and have almost no control over their impulses.

Addiction not only affects physically but ruins the addict's mental peace and soundness of the mind. Addiction is a contagious disorder that is very difficult to overcome and negatively impacts those around you. Addiction can only be resolved through step-by-step therapies and treatments. Addiction is a chronic disease and is one of the most severe health problems faced around the world. Happiness is subjective. There is no one way in which the term can be defined. For different people, Happiness holds different connotations. For some, it implies a state of mind; for others, it might mean a standard of lifestyle. Each human being is an independent, free-thinking individual. Everyone has outlook on life that is different from the other. Hence, the definition of Happiness is also variable for people. However, whatever may be the definition of Happiness, there is no denying that Happiness is an integral part of our lives. Without it, there is no point in living or going about in life.

There is a common phrase that goes: "Money cannot buy happiness." To some extent, it can be heralded as being valid. However, some people may find it to be false. For a specific section of society, Happiness is defined by wealth. These people tend to consider wealth as the measuring rod for their joys in life. For them, Happiness in life comes from material possession and well-being. Riches, money, jewels, gold, and wealth make them happy, they remain content with these in their lives.

For another section of society, wealth does not act as agent for Happiness in their lives. Many consider Happiness to be a peaceful and calm sense of joy that occurs within one's mind. For them, it cannot be measured in terms of worldly things. Happiness tends to become a feeling that can be grasped through the satisfaction of the mind and soul, and not through the pleasure of the body. Happiness can also imply success.
